

Rochi Khemka

Global Partnerships Coordinator and Asia Water Resources Specialist, 2030 Water Resources Group (2030 WRG), World Bank

Rochi currently coordinates global partnerships and the Asia program for the 2030 Water Resources Group, World Bank, supporting coalition building and alliances with key stakeholders for sustainability leadership. In the past, she has led the development of public-private engagement models and innovative financing mechanisms, resulting in many first-of-its-kind programs and projects. Prior to 2030 WRG/World Bank, she worked with International Finance Corporation (IFC), championing strategies for private sector stewardship with leading corporates, and with McKinsey and Company, advising capital markets and investment banking clients.

She is currently a Board Member of the Alliance for Water Stewardship and a member of World Economic Forum's India Business Council. She also sits on the OECD Water Governance Initiative and Roundtable on Financing and is a visiting faculty member for Shiv Nadar University on the topic of Corporate Stewardship and Water Economics. In the past, she has served on the Global Working Group of the Climate Bonds Initiative, and has been a key co-convenor of the Finance and Water Seminar of Stockholm World Water Week, pushing the envelope for new financing models and blended finance. She was also nominated to the Advisory Committee for Industrial Water, National Planning Commission, India.

Rochi holds a Master's in Financial Economics from University of Oxford, UK.
