

Yahali Amit is the founder and CEO of Illitary-AWS (Alternative Water Supply) consulting Ltd. He is an international expert of preparedness for water crisis events resulting from natural disasters, technical failures or terror attacks. Among Illitary's clients are water utilities, authorities and regulators. Mr. Amit has a proven record of significantly increasing preparedness level.

As a retired Colonel of the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) and a former Head of Emergency Preparedness Branch of the Water Security Unit at the Israeli Water Authority, he has accumulated extensive experience in projects and system management, as well as unique emergency management knowledge, both at the national and at the local level. In his last position he was a part of a development and implementation team for national water crisis: operating concept, training material and water reserve logistic operations in crisis times. Amit is currently a member of the Standard Institute of Israel's team dealing with international water crisis standardization development and implementation, leading the formulation of an international standard ISO24527- "Activities relating to drinking water and wastewater activities - Guidelines on alternative water supply during a crisis".
